Objects Conservator
Pacific Coast Conservation
Denver, CO

Full time or Part time
Interviews: Summer 2020
Hiring range: $50k - $70k (full-time)

Pacific Coast Conservation is a private art collections care and conservation firm with a studio in Denver, CO. We focus on holistic care of collections by combining the efforts of professional collection management and conservation. We work with the federal government, cities, museums, private clients, galleries and universities.

We work on a wide variety of objects and need someone with a solid base of knowledge in a range of mediums, focusing on metals, stone and wood.

The ideal candidate will be willing to travel, manage projects from beginning to end, including condition assessments, photographic and written documentation, writing treatment proposals, and performing practical conservation treatments. A background in Historic Preservation is desirable, as we often work on projects that intersect with the two fields. The candidate should be able to work independently but also enjoy working in a collaborative environment with team members. We are looking for an applicant with at least 3-5 years of experience.

Job responsibilities:

- Responsible for all conservation treatments and directs conservation technicians in performing treatments.
- Develops and implements treatment proposals for the active or preventive conservation treatment of historic objects and surfaces including sculpture, furnishings, ceramics, metals, decorative media, painted surfaces and other materials.
- Maintains memberships and represents PCC in professional organizations.
- Stays up to date with new and evolving research and treatments in the field.
- Assists with the general organization and maintenance of the PCC studio space.

Qualifications:

- A graduate degree from an accredited academic conservation or historic preservation program, or the equivalent level of professional experience; Knowledge of conservation theory and practice.
- Demonstrated conservation treatment experience.
- Professional Associate status with AIC preferred.
